'Liar' label easing

By Antonella Artuso

A new SES Research poll suggests Premier Dalton McGuinty has changed the opinion of some Ontarians that he is untruthful.

SES Pollster Nikita Nanos said the number of poll respondents who, without prompting, offered "lied/liar" as their chief dislike of the premier has dropped by 16% since February.

One in four polled still saw the premier as someone who has a spotty relationship with the truth.

"It's like the temperature in the kitchen has gone down from 95 degrees to 85 degrees but it's still hot," Nanos said.

More people now appear ambivalent about the premier, which may give McGuinty an opening to gain their support over the rest of his mandate, Nanos said.

He said the opposition Tories ran a successful campaign to brand McGuinty as a promise-breaker but have let up over the past six months.

SES also sought views on PC Leader John Tory and NDP Leader Howard Hampton.

Tory is viewed as a businessman, honest and a good speaker but most did not have a clear impression of him.

And while NDP Leader Howard Hampton was seen as policy-oriented and compassionate, most were also unsure what to make of him.

SES Research polled 504 Ontarians between Sept. 15 and 19. Results are considered accurate plus or minus 4.4%, 19 times out of 20.
